The ICSE Security Management course is aimed at experienced security operatives wishing to improve their security sector management skills. Graduates of this programme attain the knowledge, skills and competencies required by those wishing to operate at supervisor or management level within a security company or department.

Successful candidates will gain an understanding of the duties and responsibilities of a security manager as well as techniques for training and assessing staff. Trainees on this programme also develop their skills in delivering assignment instructions, risk management and operational management procedures.

This course leads to the QQI Level 6 minor award in Supervisory Security Management

Programme Aims

The aim of this programme is to equip the learner with the knowledge, skills and competencies required to work at a supervisory management level within the security industry.

Successful learners will:

- Show an understanding of the role of the security manager.
- Demonstrate how to carry out a security briefing.
- Outline the design of a security procedure and site assignment instructions manual.
- Carry out a security risk assessment and implement control measures
